Drexel & Co., recognized as one of the leading financiers in the East, is sanguine of the future of the money market. He says: "The stories that have been published from time to time about the stringency of the money market have been exaggerated. In fact there has been no stringency in the money market. There has been, to a certain extent, a timidity in some circles to let out money, but not to the extent the public has been led to believe. While it is still a little early to make predictions for the coming year, I consider that the future outlook is bright. There is no reason why this prosperity should not continue. I think there would be a fair demand for money for the balance of the year."

Col. Ingersell said to me the other evening:

"Life is a railroad train, on which every passenger knows he must be killed. Maybe to-day, maybe to-morrow, but somewhere down the line he must meet his doom. Ab ! I have no use for a world with death in it," and the jolly face grew sad, the clear, honest eyes shadowed with pain as he spoke.

I wondered if this great man did not know that the folly and fallacy of his theories of future life were expressed in the words he uttered.

I wonder if he dees not feel that the beautiful and holy love which unites his family is divine, and cannot end with this world.

There is a pessimistic tene to much he says of late. Is the great agnostic warrior laying down his arms before to pressure in the battle is over ?-Ella Wheeler in Dr. Sepre Ca the battle is over ?-Rila Wheeler in Wilcox in Globe-Democrat.
